Please join us for our fall war tax resistance gathering in Amherst, Massachusetts on November 3-5, 2017! The gathering, titled “Voices of Resistance,” will bring together people from a variety of movements to share our stories about how we are surviving economically and building fulfilling lives while working for peace and justice.

This gathering will bring together regional and national activists! It is hosted by the National War Tax Resistance Coordinating Committee, New England fall gathering of war tax resisters and supporters, and UMass Amherst Resistance Studies. It will include a number of discussions with student and community organizers about local struggles. This weekend will highlight our collective power over many years of activism.

War tax resistance is a powerful form of civil disobedience that is alive and well today! Each year, an estimated ten thousand people refuse to pay at least some portion of their taxes to protest federal spending on the military and state violence. Many people redirect that money to projects for peace and justice in our communities instead. Looking forward to seeing you there!
