Quakers List Guidelines For Viet Nam War Action

Thousands of American Quakers could suffer permanent and irreparable damage to their mental health and their relationship with the world community if they are not allowed to express their pacifist beliefs in action, a leading Quaker organization has charged. The Religious Society of Friends (Quakers) has written to the government in Washington requesting that the war in Southeast Asia in 1966 be considered in light of the international law which prohibits the use of force in international relations. The letter states that the Quakers' opposition to the war is based on their belief that the use of force is not justifiable, and that any use of force would be contrary to the principles of international law.

The organization, which is made up of about 300,000 members in the United States, has asked the government to ensure that the peace movement is not undermined by the actions of the military system that commands the war in Southeast Asia.

The Quakers have expressed their concern about the implications of the war for the international community, and have asked the government to consider the implications of its actions for the peace movement and for the world community.

The letter also states that the Quakers are committed to the principles of non-violence and that they will continue to be active in the peace movement.

The Quakers' opposition to the war is based on their belief that the use of force is not justifiable, and that any use of force would be contrary to the principles of international law.

The letter calls for a peaceful solution to the conflict, and for the government to take steps to prevent the war from escalating.

The Quakers have expressed their support for the peace movement and for the principles of non-violence, and have asked the government to consider the implications of its actions for the world community.

The letter also states that the Quakers are committed to the principles of non-violence and that they will continue to be active in the peace movement.

The Quakers' opposition to the war is based on their belief that the use of force is not justifiable, and that any use of force would be contrary to the principles of international law.

The letter calls for a peaceful solution to the conflict, and for the government to take steps to prevent the war from escalating.

The Quakers have expressed their support for the peace movement and for the principles of non-violence, and have asked the government to consider the implications of its actions for the world community.

The letter also states that the Quakers are committed to the principles of non-violence and that they will continue to be active in the peace movement.

The Quakers' opposition to the war is based on their belief that the use of force is not justifiable, and that any use of force would be contrary to the principles of international law.

The letter calls for a peaceful solution to the conflict, and for the government to take steps to prevent the war from escalating.

The Quakers have expressed their support for the peace movement and for the principles of non-violence, and have asked the government to consider the implications of its actions for the world community.

The letter also states that the Quakers are committed to the principles of non-violence and that they will continue to be active in the peace movement.

The Quakers' opposition to the war is based on their belief that the use of force is not justifiable, and that any use of force would be contrary to the principles of international law.

The letter calls for a peaceful solution to the conflict, and for the government to take steps to prevent the war from escalating.

The Quakers have expressed their support for the peace movement and for the principles of non-violence, and have asked the government to consider the implications of its actions for the world community.

The letter also states that the Quakers are committed to the principles of non-violence and that they will continue to be active in the peace movement.

The Quakers' opposition to the war is based on their belief that the use of force is not justifiable, and that any use of force would be contrary to the principles of international law.

The letter calls for a peaceful solution to the conflict, and for the government to take steps to prevent the war from escalating.

The Quakers have expressed their support for the peace movement and for the principles of non-violence, and have asked the government to consider the implications of its actions for the world community.

The letter also states that the Quakers are committed to the principles of non-violence and that they will continue to be active in the peace movement.

The Quakers' opposition to the war is based on their belief that the use of force is not justifiable, and that any use of force would be contrary to the principles of international law.

The letter calls for a peaceful solution to the conflict, and for the government to take steps to prevent the war from escalating.

The Quakers have expressed their support for the peace movement and for the principles of non-violence, and have asked the government to consider the implications of its actions for the world community.

The letter also states that the Quakers are committed to the principles of non-violence and that they will continue to be active in the peace movement.

The Quakers' opposition to the war is based on their belief that the use of force is not justifiable, and that any use of force would be contrary to the principles of international law.

The letter calls for a peaceful solution to the conflict, and for the government to take steps to prevent the war from escalating.

The Quakers have expressed their support for the peace movement and for the principles of non-violence, and have asked the government to consider the implications of its actions for the world community.

The letter also states that the Quakers are committed to the principles of non-violence and that they will continue to be active in the peace movement.

The Quakers' opposition to the war is based on their belief that the use of force is not justifiable, and that any use of force would be contrary to the principles of international law.

The letter calls for a peaceful solution to the conflict, and for the government to take steps to prevent the war from escalating.

The Quakers have expressed their support for the peace movement and for the principles of non-violence, and have asked the government to consider the implications of its actions for the world community.

The letter also states that the Quakers are committed to the principles of non-violence and that they will continue to be active in the peace movement.